

Photo Club Sees White

Written by Editor

Tuesday, 04 December 2012 11:42

White. Is it a color? The dictionary describes white as the color of light containing all of the wavelengths of the visible spectrum without absorption. For painters, since white can not be created from other colors, most consider it the absence of color. Already we have a difference of opinion.

White was also the first color used by pre-historic artists. Their drawings were created from chalk made from calcite and lime.

Each year the Photography Club of Beaufort assigns members a year-long photo project. This year, in honor of those first artists, the subject chosen was WHITE. Members spent the past 11 months digitally capturing all that was WHITE around us from birds to brides, from wine and cheese to marshmallows, flowers and glaciers, to tombstones and lace . The possibilities were endless.

Images were projected at the November meeting of the club and 40 images were chosen to be

Photo Club Sees White

Written by Editor

Tuesday, 04 December 2012 11:42

Read more About White Peacock in the Photo Club