

A Place We Call Home

Written by Editor

Tuesday, 04 October 2016 12:25

Thibault Gallery is pleased to feature a collection of paintings by Beaufort artist Mac Rogers during the month of October. Rogers has titled the collection “A Place We Call Home” – and the paintings reflect the reasons why he feels that the Lowcountry is truly “home.”

Having survived a camping trip to Hunting Island as a Cub Scout in 1958 from “Metropolitan” Orangeburg, SC, Mac vowed never to return to the mosquito, heat and humidity ridden jungle. Flash forward to now – watching boat traffic on the Beaufort River from under the canopy of oaks at Whitehall Point complete with a lunch of LT’s fried chicken. The skyline is dominated by the steeples of the Parish Church of Saint Helena, the Baptist Church of Beaufort, and Trinity Baptist Church – not high rise commercial buildings.

Off to the right a caravan of vehicles grows in length (towards LT’s) – waiting for the Woods Memorial Bridge to complete its swing following the passing of a fuel barge destined for the Marine Corps Air Station.

A Place We Call Home

Written by Editor
Tuesday, 04 October 2016 12:25

at the end of the boardwalk, the view is beautiful. The marshes are beautiful,

The parade is a wonderful sight to see. The people are all dressed in their best, and the decorations are beautiful. The Fordham sign is a great sight to see.

The water is so clear and beautiful. The rocks are so smooth and polished. The view is so peaceful and relaxing. www.fordham.edu