

More than six months ago, audiences at “Ben Speaks” raved about the world premiere of Steve Nousen’s humorous, enlightening, and touching one-man show.

So this August, writer, actor and Ben Franklin interpreter Nousen will bring Ben back to Beaufort’s ARTWorks black box theater in a production that is both encore and improvement, as he has revised the show based in part on his audiences’ input.

“I hope even those who saw the play earlier this year, will come again, to see a different side of Ben,” Nousen said. “There’s more emphasis on the man himself and on the forces and relationships that shaped this great man.”

The two-act play, which features an opportunity for the audience to interact with Dr. Franklin at every performance, was inspired by Nousen’s copious research

Read more Theater