

‘Generations’ at Art League Gallery

Written by Editor

Monday, 18 April 2016 13:08 - Last Updated Wednesday, 20 April 2016 05:39

It all began with a pen and ink artist out of New York. Harry Palmer was the first artist of the Palmer family, a well-known multi-generational family of artists. Generations later, Jim and Addison Palmer are collaborating with their Art League of Hilton Head exhibition, Generations, running May 3-28, 2016 with an Opening Reception on Thursday, May 5th from 5-7pm.

Jim Palmer, grandson of Harry Palmer, got his first major break at the young age of 16 when President Dwight D. Eisenhower purchased his painting on exhibit at the Masters Golf Tournament in Augusta, GA. Jim Palmer moved to Hilton Head in 1965 upon finishing study at University of South Carolina and Atlanta College of Art. Before Jim's focus became the Lowcountry scenes he is so known for today, Jim painted mainly in the abstract.

“From an early age, I have been drawing and painting the world around me,” says Addison

‘Generations’ at Art League Gallery

Written by Editor

Monday, 18 April 2016 13:08 - Last Updated Wednesday, 20 April 2016 05:39

When you visit the Art League Gallery, you will see a beautiful painting of a beach scene. The painting is titled 'Generations' and is by the artist [Name]. It depicts a serene coastal scene with waves washing onto a sandy beach, a dense line of trees in the background, and a bright light source breaking through the clouds. The painting is a beautiful representation of nature's beauty and the passage of time.