

New York Times and USA Today bestselling author Kristina McMorris will be the featured guest at the USC Beaufort Author Luncheon Series with her remarkable new work of historical fiction set during the Great Depression, Sold on a Monday (Sourcebooks Landmark, September 2018).

Kristina will speak at Hampton Hall in Bluffton at noon on November 15. For tickets and more information, visit www.uscbcenterforthearts.com

Protagonist Ellis Reed—a young reporter relegated to banal assignments at the Philadelphia Examiner—shoots a picture of two children advertised for sale on a farmhouse porch in Laurel Township, Pennsylvania, in 1931. The act catapults both his career and the superbly paced action in Sold on a Monday.□
