

This was my fifth Beaufort International Film Festival (the 7th overall) and like the previous iterations, the 2013 edition once again raises the bar. We tend to use this phrase a lot with BIFF, thanks mostly to the excellent (and grueling) work done behind the scenes by festival runners Ron and Rebecca Tucker and their legion of Beaufort Film Society volunteers. Once again the USCB Center for the Arts was transformed into an intimate cinematic shrine where audience and filmmakers mingled and mixed, shared feedback as well as an abundance of laughter and tears.

A week before the festival got underway filmmaker Chris Brinker died suddenly in Los Angeles while completing work on his directorial feature debut, Whiskey Bay. The film reunites local star Tom Berenger with Willem Dafoe, his fellow Oscar nominee from

BIFF 2013: Lucky Number 7

Written by Mark Shaffer

Wednesday, 27 February 2013 09:50 - Last Updated Wednesday, 27 February 2013 10:14

Platoon. It marks the culmination of a 15-year passion project and part of the reason Brinker was looking forward to being honored with the inaugural Robert Smalls Indie Vision Award.

There wasn't a dry eye in the house following a special tenth anniversary screening of Director Mike Tollin's film Radio. The post screening Q&A was a different matter as the real life inspiration for the film – James Robert "Radio" Kennedy & Coach Harold Jones – kept us in stitches along with Tollin and Sports Illustrated writer Gary Smith, who penned the piece on which the film is based.

The slate of films once again ups the ante for the 2014 fest – remarkable considering there were no features in competition this year. Judges and organizers felt the quality of entries to be sub par to previous years and so the category went on hiatus. The fact is there were so many remarkable documentaries, short, animated and student films that we didn't really miss them.

As important as the art of the event may be, the future of its continued success depends on simple economics. This year the Beaufort Regional Chamber of Commerce and the University of South Carolina Beaufort partnered on a survey for the festival to try and gauge its dollar impact. About 200 people took part and 71 percent indicated they came to Beaufort specifically for the festival. Bars, shops, restaurants and inns all saw a spike in business. Once again numbers were up from the previous year with 7600 people averaging out to about 170 per screening over three days.

BIFF 2013: Lucky Number 7

Written by Mark Shaffer

Wednesday, 27 February 2013 09:50 - Last Updated Wednesday, 27 February 2013 10:14

Lowcountry Weekly is a proud partner with the Beaufort International Film Festival. We are privileged to be involved in something about which we've come to feel so passionate. As William Hurt says in The Big Chill, "Sometimes you just have to let art flow over you." Here's hoping the culture of film continues to flow through BIFF for many, many years to come.

2013 BIFF AWARD WINNERS

Jean Ribaut Award for Excellence in Filmmaking

Producer/Director Mike Tollin, Los Angeles CA (Radio, Wild Hogs, Coach Carter, Hank Aaron: Chasing the Dream) Tollin filmed Radio in nearby Walterboro. The festival featured a 10th anniversary screening of the film with a Q&A involving Tollin, and the real life inspiration for the film James Robert "Radio" Kennedy.

Inaugural Robert Smalls Indie Spirit Award (posthumously)

Producer/Director Chris Brinker, Los Angeles CA (Boondock Saints, Whiskey Bay)

Brinker was due to attend the festival but died suddenly of an aortic aneurysm February 8 while completing work on his directorial debut, Whiskey Bay. He was 42.

Wednesday, 27 February 2013 09:50 - Last Updated Wednesday, 27 February 2013 10:14

