and

Woman's Day.

According to jamesfarmer.com his "love of Southern food and cooking have put him at the forefront of the garden-to-table lifestyle. James was taught as a young boy how to pull vegetables, herbs and flowers from the family farm and kitchen garden to provide much of the food, decor and flavor of his family's everyday life." I spoke to him by phone from his design and antique store in downtown Perry, Georgia.

Mark Shaffer: How did growing up in a small southern town influence your work?

James Farmer: I still live in that same small town where I grew up, so "influence" is a key word. It's very much the present tense. There's a charm that some small southern towns just portray naturally. The way we as southerners decorate our homes and entertain our families and friends is a natural extension of our personas. People like my mother and my grandmother – great entertainers – really set the bar for where I wanted to be.

MS: No one entertains like southerners.

JF: That's the truth.

MS: Why is that? What's different?

JF: I think we entertain and treat our guests as if they were family. My grandmother
